- A Bachelor's degree in Law, specializing in Law
- The candidate must not have been subjected to disciplinary sanctions
- Achieved positive results during the Bachelor's program

B- Training Objectives (Target Competencies, Knowledge Acquired at the End of the Program, 20 Lines Maximum(

•The major aims to achieve a distinguished level in the field of criminal sciences by studying all areas related to these sciences. This aims to provide the student who has chosen the major with a solid legal culture and a deep understanding of both the criminal phenomenon and the various responses developed by the legislator to address the phenomenon, whether in the special section of the Penal Code in its various branches, or in the field of penology, as well as in the field of criminal procedure.

•This major also represents an in-depth study of the various subjects the student has covered throughout their studies to obtain a Bachelor's degree in Law, while also exploring new subjects that were not previously covered, such as comparative criminal law and juvenile criminal law, etc.

•This specialization is unique in that it enables students to expand their knowledge in areas related to criminal law. The proposed subjects for study in the specialization require familiarity with various scientific disciplines, including psychology, sociology, and the humanities in general, as well as legal studies such as international law.

C- Targeted Qualifications and Abilities (Regarding Professional Integration – 20 lines maximum)

- Training in the specialization develops the ability to conduct scientific research, whether when preparing graduation theses or doctoral dissertations in the specialization.
- Achieve a high level of proficiency in criminal sciences.
- The ability to analyze and study criminal files to provide a fair legal solution to cases related to the specialization.
- Provide students with a distinguished academic achievement that enables those who choose postgraduate studies to complete a doctoral dissertation in order to enter higher education. This is also sufficient to quickly integrate into the judicial profession if they choose a professional career.

D- Regional and national capacities for employing university graduates.

The specialization aims to train legal professionals in criminal law. Regarding employment, graduates can pursue a master's or doctoral degree, which then opens up the opportunity for employment in higher education. This training also opens up the possibility of practicing several judicial professions, such as law and judiciary, as well as non-judicial professions (such as police, gendarmerie, prison administration, and all professions that require in-depth knowledge of criminal law and forensic sciences.)

E- Bridges to other specializations:

This specialization enables students enrolled in several specializations in private law, such as comprehensive private law, family law, and real estate law. It could also serve as a stepping stone to doctoral training in the same specialty or in other specialties of private law. This specialization will also open up opportunities for other partners within the framework of an agreement to open up recruitment positions (members of judicial bodies, police and gendarmerie personnel, and prison officers holding a Bachelor's degree in law.)

F- Training Monitoring Indicators:

In this training, we are monitoring the project through continuous evaluation of the progress of theoretical lessons in lectures and in directed assignments, as well as by scheduling practical lectures led by professors in the specialty and executives in the legal profession, the judiciary, and other legal professions. This is in addition to training courses in the field of practicing defense rights (pleadings, mock trials), and field trips to judicial structures across the Jijel province (the court, the Judicial Council, the Administrative Court, etc.).

G- Supervisory Capacity: (Determining the number of students available for support)

50 students from among the top students in the Bachelor's degree program.
